Small plane crashes near Larch Mountain

Occupants receive minor injuries

Emergency crews responded to a small plane crash in the Larch Mountain area July 5.

The call came in at 10:51 a.m. According to reports, the four-seat private plane clipped tree tops as it crash landed in the gravel pit just east of the "Four Corners" area near Larch Corrections Center in Yacolt.

According to a press release from Clark County Fire District 3, two male occupants were extricated from the plane, treated at the scene, and transported to Southwest Washington Medical Center in Vancouver. Their injuries were not life-threatening.

Firefighters applied foam to the crash site to reduce the hazard of fire from a small fuel leak.

In addition to emergency response personnel from Fire District 3, North Country Emergency Medical Services, East County Fire & Rescue, Camas Fire Department and Clark County Sheriff's Office also responded.
